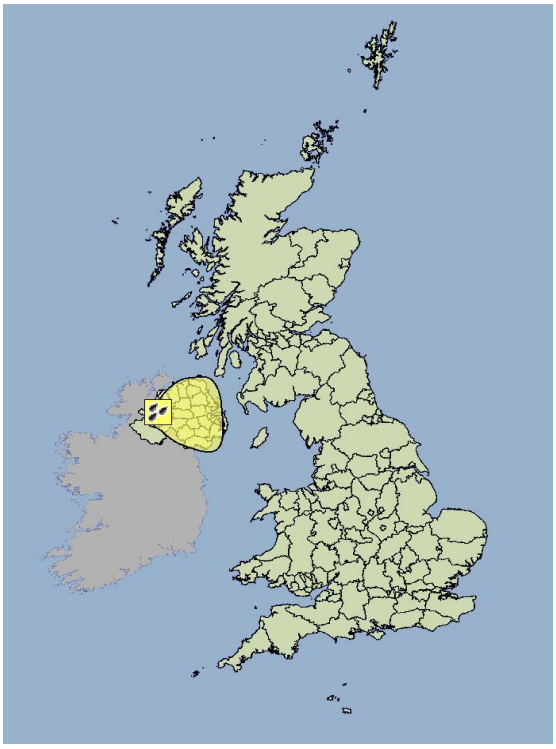
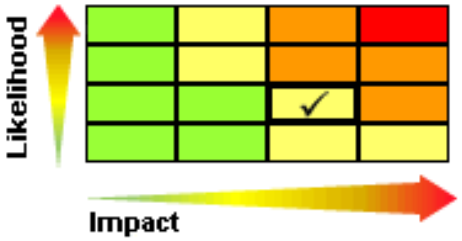
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
Slow-moving, heavy thundery showers which developed over parts of Northern Ireland this morning have become more widespread and will continue to affect some areas for a time this afternoon before slowly easing this evening. As is often the case with heavy showers, some parts of the area enclosed within this warning will miss the showers and remain dry.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Rain

Valid from 16:30 on Fri, 10th Jun 2016 until 20:00 on Fri, 10th Jun 2016

Heavy thundery showers will continue to affect parts of Northern Ireland this afternoon producing some locally high rainfall amounts. Be aware of the risk of localised flooding and disruption to travel.

This warning has been updated to extend it further east across Northern Ireland to include the Belfast area where some localised heavy downpours are developing. The end time has also been extended by an hour.
